

Class 07: Drawings as Values

Held: Friday, 1 February 2008

Summary: We consider another way to think about image. In particular, we consider what we call the “drawings as values” model, in which we describe images by transforming and composing simple pictures.

Notes:

- I may miss office hours today. If I’m not in my office, I’ll be teaching the other section of 151, so you can still hang out in here (or at least next door) and ask questions.
- Monday’s reading probably won’t be available until Saturday night. Sorry.
- Assignment 3 is now available. We’ll look at it quickly.
- If you aren’t able to finish today’s lab, I encourage you to do so on your own. (And to do the extra problems.)
- Quiz!

Overview:

- Thinking about drawings through composition/decomposition.
- Pure approaches vs impure approaches.
